

Larry's Lines...

Cursed Be Lazy Bones

Some folks crave a soft Christianity. They want religion; but they want it without rigor. They seek salvation; but they want it without service. Happily they will follow Jesus, if it can be done without cost or inconvenience. How do you suppose the Lord feels about those who claim to follow Him yet never yield up one comfort, one moment of leisure, or make one personal sacrifice. Conditional disciples, that is what they are.

They are a Christian on the condition they are exempt from work, spared weariness, never called upon, and freed from the necessity of giving. Gladly they will walk with Jesus if it can be done without dust or heat. They will run with Him if the goal can be reached without perspiration or getting their hair messed up.

Such brethren need to wake up. They are insulting God. For in effort they are saying that God's work does not deserve true labor, and that it is of so little importance that even the smallest measure of service is acceptable. What could be a greater affront to God?

Do not work with one little finger, or with one hand, or with both hands, slowly. If it is the Lord's work, then lay hold on it "with both hands earnestly." Shudder at the very thought of slackness. Make sure that no one's zeal is chilled by your own traitorous indifference. Shuffle off your slow dreamy style of serving God. Get out of your rut, for "cursed" is he who does the work of the Lord with slackness."

Have A Great Week,
Larry
